PART B: COMMENTS
Comments *	As lobbyists are generally paid by large corporations, they do not have the best interests of the general public at heart and do not represent the public's best interests but rather the corporations' desire for profit. The government has to restrict the number of corporate lobbyists allowed to represent a particular company, organization and industry. The elected government has been entrusted by the general public to ensure the best interests of the public are and are at the forefront of every decision and action carried out while in office. If laws needed to be created to achieve this result, then it has to also bind those in office who would personally profit from such lobbying.
