This bill will have the opposite effect of what is desired. Forcing repair shops to stick to their estimates will force them to pad the estimates to make up for losses in the estimating process. They will also have to increase the price to allow for the times that a repair takes longer than anticipated. That will raise prices for everyone.

The problem with modern cars is all the electronic components and many mechanics have no idea of how to fix them, so they just start replacing pieces. This bill does nothing to fix that problem.
